Types of Communication

Hi 2nd and 3rd Period,

I am missing our class so much! We are still learning about communication and this week we will focus on nonverbal communication, also known as body language. The experts tell us that 93% of what we communicate is through our body language. Unfortunately, we interpret and send messages via body language without us being aware we are doing it. It is unconscious. We have been doing this since birth but they say we are actually pretty bad at it. Experts tell us that we need to make an effort to learn body language to be more successful of a communicator. This is why communicating during this social isolating is harder, we are missing this important aspect of communication; the body language. I hope we are together soon, but until then remember miscommunications during this time may be increased because we are not always able see the nonverbal communication in a conversation in our isolated conditions.

TTYL,
Wanda Anderson RN

Objectives

Objective / I Can:

- Identify and define some of the common body language cues.
- Understand the benefits and disadvantages of poor understanding of body language
- Demonstrate the function of nonverbal communication types by being able to observe and apply examples we see around us
- Begin to understand how important nonverbal communication is in our daily lives

Activities see next page down

DWA Principles of Health Science Outreach Learning

April 6 to April 9, 2020

Student Activities: There is a worksheet called The Power of Nonverbal Communication to complete. Watch the YouTube video as a launching pad for learning some common nonverbal communication cues. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HRI0dvPRkSI>

One of the abilities to learn is to be able to take concepts from one learning experience and apply them to another. There is an Observation Assignment of Nonverbal Communication to be completed to so that we can apply the information we have learned.
